The word "Meta" signifies "beyond" and "physics" signifies "physical nature". Metaphysical poetry implies poetry that goes beyond the physical universe of the faculties and investigates the profound world. Metaphysical poetry started from the Jacobean age in the last phase of the period of Shakespeare. John Donne was the pioneer and organizer behind the metaphysical school of poetry. It questions the idea of reality in a philosophical manner. Metaphysics can cover a wide scope of themes from strict to cognizance. Metaphysics is about investigation and philosophy, not about science and math.

Characteristics of Metaphysical Poetry:

1. Themes
2. Literary Devices
3. Poets
4. Unclarity
5. Short Poems
6. Sayings in the Poetry
7. Metaphysical Conceits
8. Originality
9. Wit
10. Platonic Love

Metaphysical poetry isn't expected to be perused in a uninvolved manner. Its utilization of mystery, symbolism, vanity and mind is intended to stir the peruser. Metaphysical poetry poses the philosophical inquiries about religion, confidence, otherworldliness and being.

Andrew Marvell's "To his coy Mistress" as a metaphysical poetry:

Andrew Marvell's "To His Coy Mistress" is a run of the mill metaphysical love poem. The creativity of the Metaphysical subject and the metaphysical strategy merit an extraordinary consideration from the perusers. Marvell is one of the wonderful artists in metaphysical sections for his mind, fascinating pugnacious expertise, intriguing approach to composing and superbly use of metaphysical arrogances. His most famous poem "To His Coy Mistress" which enlighten probably the most discovered trails of metaphysical approach to writing in this piece of abstract workmanship.

In the 1st of the poet ,

“Had we but world enough, and time
This coyness lady were no crime”

If they had enough time, he would spend ‘an hundred years’ to praise her eyes and to graze on her forehead; two hundred years to admire each of her breasts; and thirty thousand years to praise the remaining parts of her body. Actually, she, the lover says, deserves such praise and adoration. That is, assuming they had sufficient room and time, the 'coyness' or sexual hesitance of his beloved would have no shortcoming with him. That's what next he says assuming they had sufficient room and time they would have sufficient opportunity to 'plunk down' 'to walk' and to pass their 'long loves day', the woman could find Rubies by the side of 'Indian Ganges' while the writer would grumble of his unfulfilled love on the banks of the river.

All his wishes are impossible, for shortage of time. Then he says,

“At my back I always hear Time's winged chariot hurrying near;
And yonder all before us lie
Deserts of vast Eternity”

He further says that her beauty will rot soon; she, will lie in her tomb; and his "repeating, Melody" won't be heard any longer. Indeed "worms will attempt that long protected Virginity"; her decent feeling of honor will 'go to clean' while his desire to have intercourse will go to cinders. For sure none needs to embrace the Grave's 'fine and confidential spot.'

In this manner, however they might not make the progression of time, stand at any point still, they can at any rate, secure its speed by appreciating however much of delight as could be expected.

On the off chance that we consider the above conversation we notice that the writer presents the poem in such an efficient manner that any woman can barely deny his sexual proposition. The principal segment gives a condition and how the speaker would do 'if' the condition is satisfied. 'In any case, the subsequent segment plainly communicates the truth contradicting the primary condition 'Consequently', the speaker, in the last area, enthus astically looks for an option in contrast to the unthinkable condition.

Now if we have a look, the scholarly part of metaphysical poetry is completely uncovered in the poem. Marvell's mind is redirecting and profound which has enhanced the poem with the interesting endowment of scholarly brilliance. For example there is found one of the most clever and thoroughly examined articulation, when the writer makes reference to that after the demise of his beloved worms shell it every one of the flesh of her body, this symbolism is extremely clever, simultaneously peculiar. In the whole poem Marvell's utilization of the absolute most uncommon metaphysical symbolisms merit our consideration, to feature the way that he has no time.

Marvell has utilized the picture of Desert of Huge Endlessness, Time Winged Chariot and so forth. Simultaneously the symbolisms like vegetable love, iron doors of life, affectionate flying predator, become a few profoundly fruitful metaphysical symbolisms.

For the conclusion If we consider above short discussion- we notice that the poet presents the poem in such a well-organized way. There is Unclarity, Originality, Wit, Platonic Love Sayings in the Poetry and most important Metaphysical Conceits. Indeed, most of the aspects discussed here are the elements of metaphysical poetry. Therefore, the poem is an excellent example of this kind.
