Answer to the question no:2

In this essay Sir Roger de Coverly is a gentleman of an ancient family. The great grandfather of him was the inventor of the coverly dance. Bondage of custom and fashion was really out of his concentration. He lives in Soho Square in the town. Once he fell in love with a lady of the next country. He rejected his love after this disappointment he remained very serious for a year and a half. Then he gradually got over it. So he keeps himself a bachelor. Before this incident, he was a fine gentleman and had relations with many important persons of the age. This incident made him careless of his dress and appearance.

In the essay the next important person is the Templer. He is a bachelor also. He is a honest and wise man. He obeyed his father and for that took the study of law to keep the promise of his father. But he also likes to study the arts and the stage. He has also read well history, arts, custom, manner of the ancient. He also has a knowledge of criticism of drama. If a Templer is present in any performance every performer does well on the stage. The bachelor visits the theatre often; his scholarship enables him to be a keen judge of dramatic performance.

The Andrew Freeport is a successful merchant. He has a great importance in London. He is very industrious, strong and great experienced people. He has lots of ideas of trade and crossborder business. He calls the sea the British common. He thinks that is a stupid way to extend dominion by arms. He considers the real strength of a nation consists in its arts and industry. He approves diligence and labour. He is known for a few maxims "a penny saved is a penny got" and "sloth is a great destroyer than the sword". He likes to being rich with plain labour and hard effort. There is a hypothesis inside of him England can be become rich by that method. He has a business contract with the traders all over the world.

Here the captain Centry is an important person also. He is a brave man, he can understand anything fastly. He can possess great merit. He doesn't want to show his intellectuality. He served as a captain in the army as a great captain. He behaved himself with great gallantry in several engagements. He has a small estate of his own. Being next heir to Sir Roger, he left the army. This does not make him feel unpleasant.

The Will Honeycomb is an important member of the club. Mr Honeycomb thinks the age is not a matter of value only the sound body and mind is matter of care. Usually he is a well dressed person and all the time he likes to do that types of conversation where the women are entertained. His entire knowledge is dedicated for the female world. When the Duke of Monmouth danced at the court which women feel in love at that time Honeycomb can tell those matters. He has a tender attention and kind treatment by beautiful ladies of the day. When anybody makes a conversation with him he feels pleased to talk with Honeycomb. He is considered as well-bred gentleman.

The clergyman who is an important member of the club. He is irregular in the club's meetings. He is very religious and a learned person. The health situation of him is very poor. In his profession he deals with the soft professionalism he cannot deal with the heavy professionalism. Therefore he is among divines, what a chamber-counsellor is among lawyers. He speaks any divine topic with authority. He can speak about any divine topic with source of it. He has a little interest about the materialistic world, because of being pious.

The essay of the club is about different kinds of people. Many people whose contributions to society are seen in the essay of the club. We can analyze the different characteristics of people by reading the essay of the club. The club world is a simily of the society and we can identify the human contribution with the different character of the essay .
