Ans. to the Q. No. ①

Philosophy is the study or creation of theories about basic things such as the nature of existence, knowledge and thought or about how people should live. He studied philosophy and psychology at Cambridge traditional Chinese Philosophy. Synonyms Thought, reason, knowledge, thinking more Synonyms of philosophy.

What is the relation between science and philosophy? I hold that philosophy is in principle autonomous. When one understands what is intended by this one will see that the claim is modest and that there are good reasons for accepting it. The view consists of two theses:

The Autonomy of Philosophy:

Among the central questions of philosophy that can be answered by one standard theoretical means or another, most can in principle be answered by philosophical investigation and argument without relying substantively on the sciences.

The Authority of Philosophy:

Insofar as science and philosophy purport to answer the same central philosophical questions in most cases the support that science could in principle provide for those answers is not as that which philosophy could in principle provide for its answers so, should there be greater in principle.

To put it in simple terms, Ethics = Morals + Reasoning. For example you might feel that it is morally ~~no~~ wrong to steal, but if you have an ethical viewpoint on it it should be based on some sets of arguments and analysis about why it would be ~~no~~ wrong to steal.

Religion and ethics are heavily intermingled for those who are religious, since one's religious beliefs will typically impact ethical issues. Those who practice or believe a specific faith are usually guided by the faith in all areas of the life. This does not mean that religion and ethics are always interlinked. Since those who have no specific leaning in matters of faith can still be ethical. Ethics are the guidelines or personal beliefs by which humans live their lives. Since most religions give instructions by which believers are to base these beliefs, religion and ethics are almost on and the same for those of faith. Christians, for instance, live their lives based on the teachings of the Bible and the Ten Commandments. Other faiths have different written guidelines for living. Most people of faith base every moral decision on the teachings of their particular faith. For instance, many Christians choose to give money to the poor because the Bible says
