Culture is a way of life of a group of people that includes their behaviors, beliefs, values, symbols, language, religion, cuisine, music, arts and other aspects that they learn and pass down from generation to generation.

Culture is also a set of patterns of human behavior that is common and unique to a community and that involves intangible elements like ethics social roles and tastes. Culture is symbolic and learned communication.

Religion is a set of organized beliefs, practice and systems that most often relate to the belief and worship of a controlling force, such as a personal god or another supernatural being.

Yes, religion play a vital role in my life. Religion is the personal belief in an ever living God, whose power is unlimited in ruling the universe and has moral relations with the human beings. Depending on your place, religion can make you think better about yourself by making you a part of the culture. Religion is not a matter of orthodox or formality, it just tells you how to live a meaningful life. There are many religions throughout the world. They all believe that there is one supernatural force beyond human control or understanding. Religion somehow increasingly important, gradually replacing the family, community or occupational group as the basic unit of society. Division of labour, characteristic of industrialization, is also applied to institutions, which become more highly specialized. Instead of being governed by tradition or custom, society comes to be governed according to abstract principles formulated for that purpose. Traditional religious beliefs often decline in importance and distinctive culture traits are often lost.

A custom is a pattern of behavior that is followed by members of a particular culture, for example shaking hands upon meeting someone. Customs foster social harmony and unity within a group. If a law goes against an established social custom, the law maybe difficult to uphold.

Few examples,

- It's a custom which is beginning to die out.
- She covered her head out of deference to Muslim custom.

- The women gathered around the coffin and began to wail, as was the custom in the region.
- The song was a custom handed ~~down~~ down through the generations.
- What customs do you have for New Year in your country?
