

Victoria University of Bangladesh
Final Assessment-Fall 2023

Name : MD Sujan ali

ID : 1119460091

Program : BBA

Batch : 46th

COURSE CODE : ENG 101

COURSE TITLE : Remedial English

Submitted to : Faria Tanzila

1

course title = Remedial English
course code = ENG-101

Ans: to the Q. No (A-1)

① can .

② been able to .

③ can .

④ can't .

⑤ isn't able to .

Section (A-2)(A-2)① could.② couldn't.③ managed to.④ couldn't.⑤ managed to.

3

Ans: to the QN (B-1)

(B-1)

- ① (B) product of a foreign country available at a ~~lot~~ below normal price.
- ② (D) none of these.
- ③ (C) The recent rapid growth of industry.
- ④ (D) a and c.
- ⑤ (D) none of these.

Section - e -

e

Online communication can never be as good as real-life friendship

While online communication has revolutionized how we connect with others, asserting that it can never be as good as real-life friendship oversimplifies the complexity of human relationships. Real-life friendship involves physical presence, shared experiences, and deeper emotional connections that online interactions might struggle to replicate.

P.t.o

The nuances of body language, facial expressions, and the subtleties of personal interactions contribute to the richness of face-to-face friendships.

The digital era has ushered in a new dimension of connectivity. Online friendships offer a unique platform to connect with people globally, transcending geographical barriers. The internet provides avenues for diverse individuals to bond over shared interests, fostering meaningful connections. Virtual friendships can be as genuine as real-life ones, with

6

People forming deep emotional bonds through heartfelt conversations, mutual support, and shared experiences despite the absence of physical presence.

Online communication offers convenience enabling individuals to maintain connections despite busy schedules or physical distance. Video calls, instant messaging, and social media platforms allow for continuous interaction. While face-to-face friendships have their irreplaceable charm online friendships

p.t.o

Provide an alternative that complements rather than competes with them.

The value of friendships, whether formed online or in real life, ultimately depends on the depth of connection and shared experiences. Each mode of communication offers distinct advantages, and dismissing one as inherently inferior oversimplifies the dynamic nature of human relationships in the digital age.